Society.

The article by J. W. McLane in the New-Vork Observer, an extract from which was published in The Tribune taken from the Newark Daily Advertiser, in the name of a Committee of a Synod, who were required to report to the Synod in Oct. 1845, contains points which may be overlooked by the careless reader, of vital impertance to the main issue.

The allegation of the writer is that the announcements of the Publishing Committee "are calculated to make a wrong impression on the mind of the reader." He cites the following notice from the 19th Annual Report-" mutilat. ing" it, however, by cmitting all the Committee say of the motives for its publication :

"A few passages in this edition, incidentally touching points in which Evangelical Christians differ, have been omitted, but not exceeding in all about four pages in 1300, and entirely urcessital to the great object and general bearing of the work."

Now what is the burden of his proof that this amountement most full and fair? Why, it is a labored effort to show that

"Mihi quidem cogitante," as LORD BROUGHAM SOYS. The only moral that Baron Alderson elicits out of the Running Rein case is one worthy of the plush rather than the ermine, and which would ome well from the lips of Baron Jenkins.

"The trial has produced great regret and disgust in my mind. It has disclosed a wretched rand, and has shown noblemen and gentlemen of rank associating and betting with men of low rank, and infinitely below them in society; in so doing, they have been cheated and made the dupes of the greatest frauds. They may depend on it, to obey it, for by so doing he would please his and bet with blackguards."

This, as the poet affectingly remarks, is coming it a little too strong. Does the baron mean that gentlemen never cheat? Is all that work done by us vulgar? Did he ever hear of a lord cheating; of gentlemen backing the lord because he was cheating? Did he ever hear of young men being rooked at play, and in good society, too? or are blacklegs only to be found among the lower classes ?

It's too bad that all the regret is to be for the gentlefolks, and all the abuse for the vulgar.— Why not lament that the commoners fall into bad company with lords, and are ruined by their wicked associates?

Besides, what is a gentleman? Does a gentleman who associates with blackguards continue to be a gentleman, or degrade himself to be a moved, and the limited means at his command blackguard? or does a blackguard become a gen- for accomplishing a benevolent scheme which tleman by consorting with such, or how?—and what may a man do and still be a getleman?—let

Mr. Justice Jenkins decide.

If gentlemen consort with rogues and swindlers, knowing them perfectly to be such, have money transactions with them, win or lose by their successful or unsuccessful reguery, it is too bad of a judge to assume that the gentlemen are the spotless in honor, and the clodpoles the only rescals. It is paying the gentlefolks a bad compliment too. What fools they must be to go into such society; where, according to Judge Alderson, the poor artless creatures are sure of being plundered!

No! A gentleman who has an affection for the society of thieves, depend upon it, frequents them for some other motive than that of having his pockets picked. There 's no pleasure in that. Our respected superiors are not so 'jolly green' as the Judge describes them. Does not Lord George show in the transaction that he can pretty well take care of himself.

They go among those knaves and swindlers, those low-bred ruffians reeking of gin and the stable, to make money of them. They associate with boors and grooms, Jew gambling house keepers, boxers and bullies, for money's sake to be sure. What other could bring such dandies into communication with such brutes? You can't suppose that a gentleman would associate with such scoundrels, any more than he would willingly incur an infection, unless he had some end in view. And the noble patrons of the turf have a great end in view-that of money. So the turf be-comes our pride, and we respect it as a great English institution, of which we have just as good reason to be proud as I have of the hump on my

But let young men coming out in life follow Punch's counsel as well as Baron Alderson's.—
"Avoid the turf blackguards," says the baron.— "My son," I say to you, " avoid the turf gentle-[Punch.

Island at the age of twenty one years, and was purchased from a slave ship by a French planter, who gave him the name of Simon Boissere.—

Possessing a superior mind, he was soon placed by his master as superintendent of his plantation Laboring faithfully, and opportunities being afforded him, he soon earned a sufficient sum of money to purchase his freedom. Instigated by to purchase small tracts of land, upon which they erected habitations, and were thus enabled by the produce of their gardens, &c. to support themselves respectably. Having secured com-fortable homes they turned their attention to their suffering brethren in captivity. Liberal subscrip-

Messes. Sands:

NEW YORK, Dec. 1, 1843.

Gentlemen—Parental feelings induce us to make the following statesment of facts in relation to the important cure of our little chaptier, wholly effected by the use of Sands's Saras-parilla. For nearly three years she was afflicted with a most investerate eruption on the body, which at times was so bad, connected with internal disease, that we despired of her life. The complaint commenced in the roots of the hair, and gradually spread until the whole head was envelobed, and then intracked the ears, and ran down the need, and continuing to increase until it covered the most of the body. It commenced with a small pumple or pustule, from which water at Sart discharged; this produced great itching and burning; then united or pustually in the same time of the commenced in the commenced with a small pumple or pustule, from which water at Sart discharged freely. The sufferings of the child were so great as almost wholly to prevent natural rest, and the door from the discharges so officiave as to make it disficult to pay that natural results of the control of t
